OX CART MAN

Donald Hall’s book “Ox Cart Man” is the source of a new focused tour of the Farmers’ Museum. Although the setting of the book is New England, and the time frame is earlier than that associated with the museum, the activities portrayed in the text and in most of the illustrations can be found on the grounds of the Farmers’ Museum. Several sites in the Nineteenth Century Village plus the agricultural activities at the historic Lippett Farmstead provide an accurate reenactment of the story line.

Young scholars, K through 2nd grade, will experience through story narration and illustration, visual presentation, and interactive activities the story of a local farmer and his family in the distant past. The book contains three principal themes: the preparation for the journey to market, the sales of his goods and the purchases made for home and family, and the return to the farmstead and seasonal agricultural life.

This is an opportunity to bring young learners to the world of “a long, long time ago”, and to the life styles and activities of the people who lived in that world. The story covers a period of four seasons throughout a year in which a farmer and his family make and grow the items that he will bring to the market to sell in the fall.

In preparation for your visit, the lesson and activities included in this packet will allow you and your students to become acquainted with the story. They will learn about the man and his family, the activities that had to be accomplished before his trip with a loaded ox drawn cart, market day with his sales and purchases, and the return home to start all over again for another future trip.

5. A Living History Museum.

Discuss The Farmers’ Museum as a living history museum. What are the students going to see and experience?

• Farmers?
• Animals?
• People working on the farm?
• An old time village?
• Historic buildings?
• People in historic clothing?
• Interpreters working with hand tools?
• Tradesmen and craftsmen?
